RULES OF ORDER

Introduction

These Rules of Order are to assist in the orderly conduct of meetings. They are consistent with the Constitution of the WFEO and its Rules of Procedure. Matters not provided for in Annex A shall be dealt with according to the procedures set out in Robert's Rules of Order (www.robertsrules.com or http://westsidetoastmasters.com/resources/roberts\_rules/toc.html).

Rules of Order provide a framework within which meaningful discussion and decision making can take place. The first and most obvious form of this formality is having the meeting proceed according to the order set down in the agenda. Procedures for setting the agenda and for dealing with routine business are set out in the WFEO Constitution and Rules of Procedures. Aside from those matters automatically brought up as routine proceedings or unfinished business or business arising from the previous meeting, matters come before a meeting through the process of making motions.

Main Motions and Amendments

There are many types of motions possible. Some are procedural (housekeeping) motions, and some are main (substantive) motions.

Basically, a motion is a formal proposal put to vote that an assembly act on a certain matter or that it officially adopt a certain policy on an issue. Once a subject has been brought before the meeting through a motion and that motion is seconded by another eligible voting member, it can be discussed and a decision, if necessary, can be made. Since main motions are sometime framed imperfectly, or give rise to differences of opinion, there is a mechanism, known as amendment, for adjusting them.

1. Making main motions.

Any member of the assembly may make a motion if he or she has been recognized by the chair and the motion is in order. A main motion is in order if there is no other motion before the meeting and it is pertinent to the next or current item on the agenda. It is up to the chair to determine if a motion is in order. To be valid another member must second the motion. Once a motion has been moved and seconded and is deemed to be in order, the matter is open for discussion. It is important to understand that a motion cannot be discussed until it has been seconded.

2. Debating on main motions.

Once the question is formally before the meeting by having been moved and seconded, all discussion must deal specifically with the subject of that motion. The mover of the motion has the privilege to speak first. If the person presiding over the meeting wishes to participate in the debate he or she must relinquish the chair for that purpose. A designated person then assumes the chair and any casting vote, until that particular motion has been put to a vote at which time the original chair resumes his or her function.

3. Interrupting debate.

Once a member has the floor he or she cannot be interrupted unless he or she violates any rules of order. When this happens, the chair or any member may intrude on the debate. The violation and remedy must be explained to the speaker before he or she can resume speaking.

4. Voting on the main motion.

It is the chair's responsibility to permit anyone who wishes to speak to do so. Once debate has clearly been exhausted, the chair puts the issue that has been discussed to a vote. The method of voting depends on the custom of the organization. There are times when it is better to conduct a secret ballot than to record a show of hands. Generally, it is enough for the chair to interpret the strength of the voice vote or show of hands. If any member disputes the result announced, the chair asks for a recorded vote. In order to pass, a main motion requires the affirmative vote of a simple majority of those present who are entitled to vote. Once a motion has been voted upon it becomes a resolution of the assembly. A question once decided cannot be brought up again at the same meeting.

5. Amendments.

Once a main motion is before the meeting, it can be amended. Members are free to offer as many changes as they like until the main motion accurately reflects the will of the majority. To present an amendment, a member must first obtain the floor in the usual way. A speaker who already has the floor cannot be interrupted to propose an amendment. An amendment must be moved and seconded just like a main motion and be specifically worded. To be accepted it must receive the affirmative vote of a simple majority. If an amendment is defeated, the original main motion is automatically before the meeting again. If the amendment is passed, the main motion automatically comes before the meeting in its changed form. Debate continues either on the main motion or on another amendment.

6. Amendment to the amendment.

Traditional rules of procedure allow members to make motions which amend an amendment already on the floor. However, it is rare to have an amendment so complex that an amendment to the amendment is appropriate. In nearly all situations, such motions can be dealt with as separate amendments. An amendment to an amendment is not itself amendable.

As well as main motions there are various other motions that have a rank according to their precedence in debate.

Other Types of Motions.

There are several other types of motions which can be entertained by the chair. These can be grouped into three classes: subsidiary, privileged and incidental motions.

a) Subsidiary motions.

These motions are a specific class of motions that may be made while a main motion is under consideration. They provide different ways of dealing with a main motion besides simply debating it and voting on it. There are seven types of subsidiary motions and they have a definite rank among them. The basic principle behind the concept of ranking is to avoid confusion. When a particular subsidiary motion is pending, all motions of higher rank are in order, and all those of lower rank are out of order. The motions are numbered from the lowest ranked (1) to the highest ranked (7):

(1) Postpone indefinitely.

The only purpose and effect of this motion is to kill the main motion without actually voting against it. It does not postpone the debate on the main motion. This motion is debatable, is not amendable, and requires a simple affirmative majority.

(2) Amend.

The use of this widely used subsidiary motion has already been discussed.

(3) Commit or refer.

The purpose of this motion is to send the main motion to a committee. The motion to commit or refer should include information concerning the size of the committee, the method of selecting its members, its terms of reference, and when the committee must report back to the main assembly. This motion is debatable, amendable and requires a simple affirmative majority.

(4) Postpone definitely.

This motion refers to the main motion and puts off discussion of the motion before the meeting until a specific time. This motion is debatable, amendable and requires a simple affirmative majority.

(5) Limit or extend debate.

This motion gives power to the members of the assembly to impose limits on debate or to eliminate some limits that already exist. This motion is not debatable, is amendable and requires a two-thirds (2/3) affirmative majority.

(6) Previous question.

The object of this motion is to immediately close debate and bring the question to a vote. This motion is not debatable, not amendable and requires a two-thirds (2/3) affirmative majority. If passed, the motion under debate at the time is immediately voted on. There is no further debate of any sort allowed once the previous question has been carried.

(7) Lay on the table.

This is the highest ranking of subsidiary motions. Its effect is to temporarily set aside the main motion and any subsidiary motions concerned with the main motion. The motion to lay on the table can only be lifted from the table by a motion from the membership. The primary use of this kind of motion is to allow the meeting to move to another piece of business even though the current matter is not resolved. This motion is not debatable, is not amendable and requires a simple affirmative majority.

b) Privileged motions.

Privileged motions rank above both subsidiary motions and main motions. They never relate directly to any pending question, but are given precedence because they deal with issues requiring immediate attention. Privileged motions must be decided immediately. There are five privileged motions and they also have a definite rank among them. The principle of ranking that affects subsidiary motions also applies to privileged motions. When a particular motion is on the floor, those of higher rank are in order, and those of lower rank are out of order. The motions are numbered from the lowest ranked (1) to the highest ranked (5):

(1) Call for the orders of the day.

This motion is used when debate is deviating from the orders of the day (i.e., the agenda). Any member can make this motion and it is not necessary for the mover to receive the recognition of the chair. The chair must put it to an immediate vote. The motion is not debatable, not amendable and must be enforced on demand of one member unless set aside by a two-thirds (2/3) negative response.

(2) Raise a question of privilege.

A question of privilege is a matter relating to rights, reputation, safety, comfort, etc., of the assembly as a whole or of any individual member. The chair must immediately decide whether the matter is, in fact, a valid question of privilege, and then take appropriate action. There is no voting unless the chair's decision is appealed. The motion is not debatable, is not amendable and requires a simple affirmative majority to pass if the decision of the chair is appealed.

(3) Take a recess.

A recess is a short intermission in the proceedings. A motion to recess must be specific about time, and that aspect of it can be amended. It is not debatable and requires a simple affirmative majority. If carried the recess occurs immediately. After the recess the meeting carries on from the point at which the recess began.

(4) Adjourn.

The motion to adjourn is used to close the meeting or continue it at another time, place or date. The meeting is not actually over until the chair declares that: "The meeting stands adjourned". The motion is not debatable, is not amendable and requires a simple affirmative majority. The chair can also close the meeting at the end of new business if none of the members raise an objection.

(5) Fix the time to which to adjourn.

When the time allocated for a meeting is insufficient to deal with all the business on the agenda during that time, it is sometime necessary to complete some items from that agenda before the next regular meeting of the organization. In this case a motion to fix the time to which to adjourn the current meeting is employed. It specifies the time and place when the adjourned meeting will reconvene. Such a meeting must take place before the next regular meeting. This motion is debatable, amendable and requires a simple affirmative majority.

c) Incidental motions.

This class of motion deals mostly with procedural matters. The motions are not ranked in any particular way; they are dealt with as they arise. The three most frequently used are motions to:

(1) Point of order.

When the rules of debate and procedure have been violated, it is the duty of the chair to enforce the proper rule. The chair or any individual member may interrupt the speaker to raise a point of order. A point of order must be raised as soon as the breach occurs. The chair must rule on the point before debate can continue. A point of order is not debatable or amendable. Before the chair decides if a rule has been broken it must offer a full explanation and can submit the question to the assembly. In that case a simple affirmative majority is required.

(2) Appeal the decision of the chair.

The ruling of the chair can be appealed. The purpose of an appeal is to reverse the decision of the chair. It takes two people to initiate an appeal: one to make a motion, another to second it. To be valid an appeal of the chair's decision must be made immediately after the ruling. The motion is debatable on its merits only. It is not amendable and requires a simple negative majority to reverse the decision of the chair.

(3) Suspend the rules.

A motion to suspend the rules is used when an assembly wishes to do something that is against its regular rules of procedure, but not in conflict with the basic constitution or bylaws of the organization. The reason for having to suspend the rules is usually to allow a speaker to be heard at a particular time or to deal with a piece of business out of order. The motion is not debatable nor is it amendable. If the motion is to suspend the Rules of Order, a two-thirds (2/3) affirmative majority is required. If the motion is to suspend ordinary standing rules, a simple affirmative majority is required.

For information on how to deal with the many other incidental motions, reference should be made to Robert's Rules of Order.
