Speakers at the "Diversity and Inclusiveness in Engineering Education" webinar discussing future engineering education topics.

(Kuala Lumpur, 21st) The World Federation of Engineering Organizations (WFEO) and the International Network of Women Engineers and Scientists (INWES) jointly organized a "Diversity and Inclusiveness in Engineering Education" webinar, attracting hundreds of participants to discuss diversity The importance of sex and inclusiveness in future engineering education and the quality of graduates.

The seminar also explored growing evidence that diversified organizations are more successful and effective. Globally, shortages of STEM and engineering skills can be resolved through diversity in this field.

The results of the seminar showed that women accounted for 50% of the population. However, in the field of engineering, the number of female students and professionals is obviously less than this number. In many parts of the world, it is generally about 10 to 25%. Other groups.

The above seminar was presided over by Professor Gong Ke, President of the World Federation of Engineering Organizations. Participating speakers include UNESCO Peizhi, INWES President Geer, UNESCO Benchmark Review Working Group Chair Professor Buren, Marlene Kanga, Leung Wai Yee, President of the Malaysian Society of Engineering and Technology, Professor Don Er of the Women's Committee, and Yotunda, Chairman of the Women in Engineering Committee.
